I have actively studied subjects related to health, nutrition, and fitness for thirty years. I enjoyed working as a medical assistant for over ten years and thought it would be a lifetime career until I discovered a passion for fitness while attending aerobic classes. I learned to teach aerobics classes and taught part-time back in the days of Jane Fonda, leg warmers, and headbands. My yearning for credibility led me to become a certified aerobics instructor headbands. My yearning for credibility led me to become a certified aerobics instructor through the American Fitness Association of America in 1986. I was content for many years working as a personal trainer, supervisor, and fitness director. I enjoy my career, but I would like to expand my opportunities to lecture at seminars and conferences and design corporate wellness programs. I am currently the educational director for a fitness center with eleven locations. I teach a personal training education course several times per year and develop continuing education courses for their personal trainers. #### LEARNING AUTOBIOGRAPHY

LEARNING AUTOBIOGRAPHY

My first job was working as a telephone operator and receptionist for a busy truck brokerage firm after graduating from high school in 1981. The company's business was conducted over the phone. I answered over ten phone lines and was the first point of contact with customers and potential customers. The customers relied on my communication and organizational skills to direct them to the proper broker, as well as deliver detailed messages in a timely manner if the broker was not available. I also helped the accounts payable department type and file invoices. The owner became overextended after adding many subsidiaries under the umbrella - I feared I would lose my job and began to search for a new one. I fortunately fell into a temporary medical assisting position through a friend of my mother.

In January 1982 I walked into unfamiliar territory as I began my temporary position. Initially I answered phones, scheduled appointments, and checked the patients in and out. The office manager recognized I was a quick learner and within a few days I was taking patients to exam rooms, reading patient charts and initiating preexam procedures prior to physician examination which included checking blood pressure and obtaining patient medical history. I enjoyed the patient interaction and although everything was new to me, I loved learning medical terminology and basic medical procedures and working in a medical office. I was offered and enthusiastically accepted full-time employment. I was eager to learn as much as possible to assist with patient care. The physicians taught me to draw blood, give injections, remove sutures and casts, administer EKG's, provide urinalysis, prepare slides for viewing, and read lab and other various medical reports. I accompanied the physicians in the exam rooms and assisted with medical and surgical procedures. I saw first-hand the health consequences of diabetes and heart disease, as well as other diseases I knew little about such as hepatitis and anorexia. Because of my interest in understanding patient health problems, the physicians took the time to explain them to me. Other duties included answering phones, scheduling appointments and surgeries, telephoning prescriptions to the pharmacy, authorizing drug refills, preparing new patient charts, maintaining medical records, filing, posting charges and payments, and transcribing medical records when the transcriptionist was sick or on vacation.
